

Ryan A. Francis

"I enjoy helping individuals and businesses achieve their goals despite the challenges they are facing. I leverage my business experience to help clients navigate regulatory, legal, and transactional complexities."

Ryan is an attorney in the Information Technology and Corporate Law practice groups and represents a variety of clients, both large and small, in transactional matters. His prior experience starting and running a small business gives him a good understanding of client needs and challenges. He appreciates the value of using resources efficiently and effectively when trying to achieve a goal and strives to find creative solutions to business challenges.

With a background in corporate law, information technology, and intellectual property law, his expertise includes:

- Drafting and reviewing software license, SaaS, master service, remote hosting, and operating agreements and related statements of work

- Formulating business strategies

- Advising on terms of service and privacy policies

- Assisting with business entity formation, dissolution, and related transactional matters

Ryan is licensed to practice in Minnesota.
